Dear Gary Miller:

It is common sense to clean up after yourself. Some companies should be reminded of this. A ton of waste is being thrown into the San Jacinto River. When it floods the toxins go into people's yards; Other problems are that people are fishing near the site, and health issues are being caused by the waste pits.

Would you like a whole bunch of waste in your yard? I don't think you should like that. It's just so nasty. If the companies would just clean up after themselves, then you wouldn't have to worry about it. When they make a mess, they should just clean it up.

There are lots of people who like to fish. So the people who live by the San Jacinto River fish there. Basically, if they decide to eat the fish, they would have all these chemicals inside their bodies which are not healthy.

The people who live near the San Jacinto River have problems with their health. For example, people are getting different kinds of cancer. The San Jacinto River needs to be cleaned out because that's not good for our community. We need to start taking better care of our community or, better yet, our world.

As you can see the San Jacinto River is contaminated with waste. We need to get up and clean up. If we just keep putting waste and trash in the River, how are we going to survive? We need to stop thinking about money and worry about our lives.

Sincerely
